Horse Sense

By

Jordan Stempleman

First Printing, 2007
Jordan Stempleman

*a dusi/e-chap : a special 100-chap edition, published collaboratively & in part with 63 other poets : www.dusie.org/

Many thanks to the editors where a few of these poems first appeared: New American Writing, Noon, Otoliths, and PFS Post. for Marlee and Bella & Peanut We Were Brought into a Straining Shape there are little runts and blunted comments, middle names for everyone, the slightest impression embossed on a handkerchief squeals for one better truth to try and imagine one better truth, exhibitions in the sense they pour, nervous as donors are we all

May Mean

There is that driving again. Every day, sitting in something not made for you, entirely suited to a larger body, a belief to be taken along with songs from this time or another time, and nothing else. Well, there’s also the awful attentiveness. The planted and unmoving parts from us, swimming beside before falling behind, that add to the panic, the childish and unrational wind, unclear and lumbering on the outside, the speech of places left behind.
Givens

I accept, combinations of unlikely to unanswered, I accept the darkness of triumph as apart, I accept the numinous risings gone once convinced, and the collapsing recline of a cold, lost balloon.

I accept, the lowly surgeon who’s taken with the worker’s old work, I accept a second matter that stares long after the first, I accept the untimely hero bored before ruin, and the son asked to cut his father’s last hair.

I accept, what is and what weakens to reprove,

I accept all the rooms filled with gods obsessed and alone, I accept the nearest to fire or the closeness of hope, and the plan to end saying, I will say it once more.

Facings

There’s an ease in which to waste a catching up. To sit back, I suppose, always vocal enough to account for each visit when a name appeared and lost all privacy. Love is the way through that rids those predictions of more than they try for. The unconcealed slight, happy in the afternoon, happy to be the bother that’s slow to reach the richer finds that will one day ask me to forget.
Love
for Marlee

I told them, you can take half the conversation away from a stranger without them ever knowing it, take the real side away, and then turn it into that place, that day that never happened to you, some intended thought, now yours. There, you will have it for years, or because of the excitement that will no doubt accompany this treasure, the night will come when, not alone to repeat it only to yourself, perhaps, lying down in a close but uncomfortable position, faced with a person equally as exciting (in their own way) as what you've heard, you will tell them this side of things, so they can stare at you as you tell it. And afterwards, before falling asleep near them, they will tell you, I know, I was there.
Old Parts

There is now one good ear left. The last one to go, was too heavy on the cotton and not the common sense. There is no longer any disillusionment about what will give up next. The mugs are now filled with boiling white tea. The stapler is used while squinting towards the light. Gloves, although lined with rabbit, weigh down these hands, so they often rest there, long overdue, dangling and down by my side.
Grafts of Centered Stillness

“Give my love to, oh, anybody.”
—JAMES SCHUYLER

there are less ends, throated

in the spirit of readiness,

a life holding hard, steady, and off, a piece of this word to prove through, spent,

whatever that means, what the day woke to, gave in for, there are years caught, conglomerate

of the forgotten,

my forgotten and their sense of what thus errors don’t do, or stand for over time

Primers

and after these years, once their speaking is made complete, not for them it’s said, but alongside a life, they will begin to tell of what went into them, what amounted to, time apart and the well formed tour, nights and walks for lunch, counted as one, the first evening at home, when home meant not leaving or wanting to leave, totaled as two, those arrived at days, recalled exactly as they were, and so, extended, no longer to go on as what was left of them, but to settle without sift, to consider each moment that coursed as able, as so good at what they do that, when they spoke up and announced, this is how we are to end, it began, and what once stood as surroundings, moved behind these times to form the unheard of hours, waiting to open without falling forward, vacant and unlike any other time before For What is More Rest

There is a looseness in tending to look back. No, it’s as it is. There’s nothing to it that differs from what happens elsewhere, what accumulates and is everywhere for now. Tonight, I just thought I saw into a playful determination to stay around. But no. I haven’t even come to it yet. There won’t be the time, the haulage to take care of burdens, so sight can go clear, and ends can go on.
Piquante

And I’ve fallen off a stool which means, I wasn’t meant to reach so far out first thing in the morning.
To be sitting there. To have a very important center that regrows each day with minimal water, minimal outings. What a difference it is to be between the unwritten and the unsaid!
There’s a cookbook I’m skeptical about, so I’ve left it in the drawer for months now, where I know it keeps on serving the same dish, day after day, without pictures to account for all it’s done, without an organism to break down starch, and sugar, and taste.
Marching

There were more answers than one could prepare for, tasting of cow and other horrors that tempt a thorough cleaning. There is no defense for the visible. Once said, they are then attitudes, named into persistent orders, growing backs that seem quite aimless and unquestionable to what supports our usable state. We call it an attack but it isn’t so. Suppose we are the same to hide from it though, that as it ages, we are going, going under what answers us in return. A pound of heat, whenever it’s about. A pound of heat against the meantime for now.
The Apartment

He asked, who lives there, then brought over his laundry, covered all the windows with socks, his old t-shirts, pillowcases now separated from their sheets. The day seemed to go on forever. The sunlight, and only the sunlight, almost made its way through, went on trying to get in for a very long time.
Materials

I build what stays still. Those things, yet to guide themselves through successful tendencies. The shirtless and aware, those terrified communities who know exactly where the attention is heading, how it will go on to grow, to threaten what means nothing to me now, much less to go on dwelling in the tolerance of there before.
Now we have to go out and lie

The compulsive nature of the body says twins work to develop the concept of eye level.

*

Not by accident the owner of the theatre lost skin in sunlight. Going, going, going at night. Maybe, it truly is a growing problem.

*

In defiance of a time like ours the island hails the first washed ashore as the pudenda betrayed by several oncoming and ungrateful new waves.
But You’re Here

As I tell my story I spit because of what would otherwise come out. A generous leaking from being so insistent and seemingly like this.
There are two mothers there to wipe my chin. One collects the truth, while the other motions for me to keep at it, don’t stop talking, I’ll know exactly who it is that left you soon enough.
In This Town

calling this growth, or not there, no, there’s touch in whatever distance reaches to use, to mark for itself the residual or inhabiting layer, the unloaded visit suspending entrance, where returns stay, closing in on what tells of where it comes or goes The Retired Couple

Stop licking the bread before calling me into that impossible position again.
The night to remember is impatiently waiting to be left alone.
It is said there is a greenhouse in this night, filled with a kind of bamboo that can tend to itself.
I mean, that’s actually why it’s there.
To live without us, without so much as a visit, doing whatever it is the unthinkable do.
Keep Away From Reach

“Beware the good man.
He has no forgiveness.”
—PAUL HOOVER

The mark of the lifelike is a certain rendering of what passes, or what is soon to go.
It needs a lowered head, a pulse in defiance of precedent, a storm undergoing surgery, warm and unmoving, those furthest away slowed from reaching this earth.

Jordan Stempleman is the author of Their Fields (moria, 2005) and What’s the Matter (Otoliths, 2007).